ABSTRACT

This research aims at analyzing necessity of vengeance in the Count of Monte Cristo novel by using Psychoanalytic Criticism. The major problem in this research is to describe how necessity of vengeance is reflected in Alexandre Dumas’ the Count of Monte Cristo. The research consists of two objectives: analyzing the novel based on structural elements and analyzing the novel based on psychoanalytic criticism. This study uses qualitative research. The object of the study is the Count of Monte Cristo novel written by Alexandre Dumas. There are two kinds of data source: primary and secondary. The primary data source is the text of the novel Alexandre Dumas’s Count of Monte Cristo and the secondary data sources are some books and article related to the subject. The method of collecting data in the research is library research by summarizing, paraphrasing, and documenting the data. In analyzing the data, the writer applies descriptive analysis. The result of the research is that based on psychoanalytic analysis, the main character, Count of Monte Cristo, is a man who has a pleasure seeking personality.

Keywords: vengeance, psychoanalytic, necessity, pleasure, personality.
A. Introduction

Vengeance is a harm committed to guilty people as the punishment for harm that they have executed to that person or related one. An affair of exacting vengeance frequently occurs in society as a kind of destructive social problem. This disease is unplayful problem because this affair can destabilize and harass social tranquility. Majority of problems motived by vengeance desire tend to be violent and crime. Therefore, this destructive affair becomes serious concern for many parties, for example: psychologists, psychiatrists, criminologists, and artists. To artists, the phenomenon of vengeance is a dangerous problem in society. Thus, to express their concern about this affair, they then make master piece reflecting this problem in novels, poetry, and songs. There are many novels raising this issue, and one of them is Count of Monte Cristo novel written by Alexandre Dumas.

His novel the Count of Monte Cristo is a novel from French. This great novel was complete in 1844 and consisted of 1276 pages. It is published by Penguin classics. The story takes place in France, Italy, islands in the Mediterranean, and in the Levant during the historical events of 1815–1838. The Count of Monte Cristo is a kind of adventure novel which is primarily storied about forgiveness, hope, justice, mercy, and vengeance.

There are some literature reviews concerning with The Count of Monte Cristo written by Alexandre Dumas. Grace Tjahjaputri (2002) with her thesis entitled a Study of Edmond Dantes's Character Change before the Denunciation, after the Denunciation, and after the Revenge in Alexandre Dumas's the Count of Monte Cristo. She concludes that taking revenge does not always bring satisfaction for the doers. Finally, vengeance makes a man’s character become worse. Heith Copes’ research (2007) entitles Street Justice: Retaliation in the Criminal Underworld. In his research, he concluded that the authors’ writing style, insights, and analyses coupled with offenders’ personal accounts successfully bring the reader into the criminal underworld so that we can understand the pressures and constraints associated with street vengeance. Those interested in qualitative criminology will find it a valuable resource.
Latifah’s research paper (2005) entitles Personality of the Main Character “Edmond Dantes” as Reflected in Alexandre Dumas’ the Count of Monte Cristo. She concludes that the environment surrounding the main character’ “Edmond Dantes“ influenced the main character’s personality. The other thesis is from Antonius Christopher (2009) entitled Edmond Dantes' changing concept of justice in Alexandre Dumas' The Count of Monte Cristo. He concludes that Edmond Dantes' case shows that retributive justice is not a perfect concept of justice because it will create another trouble. On one hand, restorative justice can give the solution to the problem.

This main issue of this research is necessity of vengeance experienced by the main character named Count of Monte Cristo. It is analyzed by using psychoanalytic approached proposed by Freud. Psychoanalysis is the most famous theory of psychology. It is a branch of psychological study concerning with personality of human being.

Freud then divides the structure of personality into three levels, namely: id, ego, and superego. The human behavior is created because there are interactions among the three. Roughly, Id represents “inhibited impulses”. It has orientation on avoiding pain and pursuing pleasure (pleasure principle) (Pervin, 1984: 76). The superego represents “the voice of conscience”. This structure functions to control behavior in accordance with the rules of society and reward and punishment. The ego represents “rational thinking” (Hall and Lindzey, 1985: 33). Ego can be said as executor or manager of personality that decides what kind of instinct will be satisfied and how to satisfy.

B. Research Method

In this research, the writer uses qualitative research. The steps to conduct the research are determining the type of the study, the object of the study, data and data source, technique of data collection, and technique of data analysis. The object of the study is necessity of vengeance reflected in Alexandre Dumas’ The Count of Monte Cristo (1844). It is analyzed by using a psychoanalytic approach.
There are two data sources needed to conduct this research. They are primary data sources and secondary data sources. The source of primary data is Alexandre Dumas’ The Count of Monte Cristo (1844), while the sources of secondary data are from other sources related the study, such as: website, dictionary, and some books which support the research. The technique used in analyzing the data is descriptive analysis. It relates to structural elements of the novel named Alexandre Dumas’ The Count of Monte Cristo (1844). The techniques of collecting data are reading novel and note taking.

C. Finding and Discussion

1. Finding

Count of Monte Cristo is the main character who most suffers in the novel. His suffering due to the torture and inappropriately behavior by his offender makes conflict among Id, ego, and superego which influences his mental condition.

The first Id arises when Dantes is looking at the sea and Marseilles. The Id wants to get pleasure by asking him to imagine the death and asking to plunge into the sea.

The next Id emerges again when Dantes wants to meet the inspector of Chateau D’If to tell his mistake. He wants to prove that he is innocent and wrongly captured. He asks him to be freed. However, the inspector does not believe in and decides to leave him. The Id then makes Dantes want to be angry.

The fifth Id arises when Count is suffering and loses hope to live. The Id wants to get pleasure by getting his revenge in order to makes his enemies feel his suffering.

The sixth Id comes when Dantes wants to tell Mercedes about his condition in prison. He wants to know that he is in despair and is arrested in Chateau D’If. He wants to makes sure his father and Mercedes relief after hearing his message.

The seventh Id arises when Dantes wants to fulfill his hunger and find safety from the guards of Chateau D’If, because he is stranded in the sea. The Id asks him to lie that his ship is sunk so he can get the food and be safe from the guards.

The eighth Id comes when he is in Fernand de Morcerf’s mansion. The Id wants him to refuse any nourishment served by Morcerf’s family.

The ninth Id arises again when Dantes is visited by Mercedes in Count’s house. The Id wants to avoid his pain by cursing the enemies who make him suffer. The Id also says that he must revenge for his self and kills Albert de Morcerf.

The last Id appears when Count is with Danglars and Luigi Vampa in Bandit’s nest. The Id wants to fulfill his pleasure by punishing, kidnapping, and bankrupting Danglars. He bankrupts Danglars by asking him to go to Italy and then takes all his money.

The first superego appears to stop the Id which wants to get pleasure by asking him to plunge into the sea. The superego uses religious power to stop it. The superego says that God will always help you to find the truth and he must live.

The next superego appears to give advice to Dantes that he should stop being angry. He also asks Dantes to begin to pray to God and hopes the miracle will happen.

The fourth superego comes to suppress the Id which wants him to die. The superego advices that he must live and struggle to very last. He is sure that he will win back the happiness of which he has been deprived.

The fifth superego appears to stop the Id by telling him not to exact vengeance. The God will punish the wrongdoer.

The sixth superego arises when Dantes’s Id wants to harm the jailer. The superego tries to stop the Id by saying that there is no use to harm the jailer and if Dantes harms him, he will be moved to the creepy dungeon.

The seventh superego tries to deny the Id which asks Dantes to lie. The superego asks Dantes to tell the truth that he is just escaped from Chateau D’If.
The eighth superego appears to stop the Id which asks Count to refuse the food. The Superego says that he must eat and drink what the family serves to him as a way to respect the family.

The ninth superego comes to attack the Id which is asking him to get his revenge. The superego tries to stop the Id by using Mercedes’ apology and tears. Mercedes asks him to stop the vengeance and forgives all his enemies. She also asks to spare her son life.

The last superego emerges to pressure the Id which wants to punish Danglars. The superego asks him to release Danglars, because he regrets for the mistake and calumny to him. Moreover, Danglars also seems powerless and mad.

The first ego follows the superego and denies the Id. The Id wants to get pleasure by asking him to plunge into the sea. However, the Id can be stopped by superego with his religious power. The superego says that God will always help him to find the truth and he must live. Thus, he does not plunge into the sea.

The next ego follows the Id and pushes away the superego. He does not receive the superego’s suggestion, because the Id strongly pressures the ego. He then loses his mind. He utters blasphemies to God and dashes himself furiously against the wall. The Id totally controls the ego and makes Dantes angry. The Id makes him fancy about his unknown persecutors who are punished with the most horrible tortures which are more painful than the death.

The fifth ego follows the Id which asks to get revenge and pushes away the superego. He will get revenge to make they feel his suffering.

The sixth ego strongly follows the Id to harm the jailer if his want is not obeyed by the jailer. He then forces him by lifting the stool and begins to throw away the stool to the jailer if he refuses. However, the jailer manages to escape and because of this, Dantes is moved to the dungeon.

The seventh ego follows again the Id and denies the superego to tell the truth. He then lies to the smuggler that he is a stranded one and his ship is sunk. The Id says that he is hungry and needs to eat. Then, the ego pressured by the Id asks food to fulfill his hunger.

The eighth ego follows the Id's wants and denies what the superego wants. The ego then refuses to receive and to eat any nourishment served by Morcerf’s family.

The ninth ego follows the Id which beats the superego. The Id pressures the superego which asks him to stop vengeance by using the Mercedes’ apology and appeal. The ego then follows the Id to continue the vengeance and it is impossible to stop. He cannot also spare her son life.

The last ego follows the superego, after he accepts the Id to punish Danglars. The Id wants to kidnap, blackmail, and suffer him in starvation. However, the superego manages to pressure the ego dominated by the Id by asking the ego to release him because Danglars has regretted of what he had done to Count in couple years ago.

2. Discussion

Count of Monte Cristo is described as the character who much suffers. In this novel, he experiences many internal and external conflicts which create conflict among the Id, ego, and superego. The structure of personality which often dominates among others is the Id. The Id often comes within Count’s mind to pursuit his pleasure that is exacting vengeance and pushes away the superego from the ego. It makes Count out of control and breaks his religion norm. The Id then completely dominates the ego. Thus, it can be inferred that he is a man who has a pleasure seeking personality.

The Id pressuring the ego leads anger. He is angry, because he is attacked, tortured, and behaved inappropriately by his enemies. Vengeance which appears within a person’ mind initiated by feelings of resentment, frustration, irritation, grief, anger, and hatred (Trechter, 45: 2011). When he is harmed, he then cannot tolerate those acts and will repay toward his enemies. The Id then pressures the ego again to exact retaliation in form of aggressive action. He thinks to give punishment to his enemies which is equal or more deadly than his suffering. He gives punishment to make his enemies repent and know how it feels to be tortured and behaved inappropriately. This is then called as vengeance.

Count of Monte Cristo is formerly a poor sailor man. His true name is Edmond Dantes. When he is about to marry and promoted to be a new promotion as captain of ship. His jealous enemies (Caderousse, Danglars, and Fernand) write a fake letter about conspiracy of Bonaparte to the king’s attorney. Because of this, Dantes is dragged into prison by Villefort, because he thinks the letter is dangerous to Villefort. Dantes then turns to be frustrated, despaired, angry, and miserable. Dantes thinks why he must be tortured. According to McCullough (2008: 39), the desire for revenge easily “comes when they feel that he is victimized, ostracized, criticized, or antagonized”. Dantes becomes the victim of their tortures. Because of it, the fury and desire of paying back arises in Dantes’ self.

In this novel, the way of Dantes to exact his vengeance is different with general vengeance which is usually direct, aggressive, and destructive. He exacts his vengeance indirectly. He firstly finds information of his enemies and then finds persons which are related to his enemies. It will make him easier to approach to his enemies. After that, he ruins slowly their life, carrier, families, and business. In the story, his two enemies are dead and the others are still alive, but mad. After his revenge totally finishes, the Id, finally, gets pleasure which is delayed for twenty four years. He feels satisfied and relief and succeeds to treat his traumatic sense. However, it is just temporary. The superego pressures the Id dominating the ego. The superego says that he is overwhelming. There are many innocent people who are deceased because of him. It makes Count feel guilty. He turns to be pale and despaired.

The researcher finds some previous literary works which has the same discussion about vengeance in the Count of Monte Cristo. Based on the previous study, vengeance does not always bring satisfaction for the doers, it only gives vague pleasure and even it can make the doer’s character worse and also another trouble. Thus, vengeance is a destructive attempt conducted by the victim, because the offender harms the victim physically and mentally. The victim then tries to give punishment to their enemies in order to make them repent (Gollwitzer and Markus, 2007: 840). Vengeance is commonly caused by harm, misdeed, and unfairness. It leads to aggression, international conflict, and death (McCullough, 2008: 61).

The person who becomes victim has a deep anger and will plan to avenge. He will release the anger and feels relief just by exacting revenge. Desire of vengeance can control the victim’s mind to get revenge and he will think that he is subordinated and weak. Vengeance is very necessary for him. He cannot keep his misery in his mind, because it can blow out his mind. It also makes him sick, for example: insomnia, headache, and stomachache when he is in prison. Moreover, it can make him lose mind or stressful. In short, the desire for vengeance can create such a powerful psychological toxin that makes the victim sick (Karen Horney in McCullough, 2008: 6).

The \textit{Id} tells the \textit{ego} that he has to restore the integrity and self-esteem disgraced by his enemies and to change the enemies’ perceptions that he is the one who is not appropriate to get tortured. It means that vengeance can restore the avenger’s integrity and self-esteem (Keyishian, 1982: 21). Thus, after his vengeance is finished, he can be relief and satisfied from his mental illness.

D. Conclusion

Based on the analysis and discussion, this study draws a conclusion that based on the psychoanalytic analysis, Count of Monte Cristo is a man who has a \textit{pleasure seeking personality}. Count is the man who often follows the \textit{Id}. The \textit{Id} often appears to pressure the \textit{superego} and influences the \textit{ego} to do what the \textit{Id} wants. Vengeance is necessary for Count of Monte Cristo to restore his self-esteem and to punish their enemies in order to make them aware of their mistakes.
