ABSTRACT

The objectives of this study are (1) to identify the types of errors frequently made by students in writing introduction texts, (2) to determine the most common types of errors in writing introduction texts, (3) to analyze the sources of errors that occur in writing introduction texts. The method used in this study was qualitative descriptive, with document review as the data collection technique. This research applied data analysis through five stages, starting from dataset reevaluation, error data collection, tabulation based on categories, identification of error sources, and drawing conclusions. Data were collected from 17 fifth-grade students at Ngabeyan 01 State Elementary School. The results of the study reveal that the most common errors made by students in writing introduction texts are omission (48%), addition (10.5%), misformation (41%), and misordering (0.5%). The most frequently occurring error is omission. The sources of errors identified are interlingual transfer accounting for 48.5% of errors and intralingual transfer contributing to 51.5% of errors. These findings underscore the significance of tailored instructional approaches to address writing challenges. By elucidating common errors and their sources, this study offers valuable insights for educators, particularly English teachers, to refine teaching strategies and foster students' writing proficiency effectively. Ultimately, it aims to contribute to the advancement of English language education, facilitating students' achievement of educational goals in both academic and practical contexts.
